Course Description

This course introduces students to basic theories about social movements and collective action. The topics discussed in this course include the occurrence of social protests and social movements, the reasons for individuals' participation in collective action, the role of leadership, movement strategies and tactics, issue framing, and outcomes of social protests. Protest events in Hong Kong, mainland China, and other countries and areas will be used to explain the theories discussed in the course.

After taking this course, students are expected to: (1) understand the basic theories about social movements and collective protests; (2) be able to analyze the dynamics of social protests; and (3) understand the consequences of social protests and their implications for governance and policy making.

Course Requirements

1. Class participation and question submission (25%)

Students are expected to attend each class and to participate in class discussion; they are expected to submit one question (more questions are welcome) based on the reading of each week for class discussion. The question should be submitted to the TA, Sijia Duan, at sduanaa@connect.ust.hk before 9:00 pm Thursday afternoon. Question submission starts from the second week.

2. Two open-book in-class assessments (40%)

- a. Mid-term assessment (20%)
- b. Final assessment (20%)

Answer 2 out of four essay questions.

3. Group projects (research paper): 35%

Students are encouraged to work together to finish a research project on any aspect of social protests. For example, a topic can be about a protest incident, and you can explain and analyze why or how it occurs, how participants are mobilized, why it succeeds or fails, or why roles the leaders or activists play, etc. The group project can be conducted by two students. If anyone who wishes to complete a research project alone, it is allowed. The research project should be around 7-8 pages (a longer one is acceptable), single-spaced, with the front being 12. The deadline for the paper submission will be announced later. You are welcome to discuss with me about your topics.
